

Removing barriers to create an inclusive and accessible society for all: the 2012 World Day for Disabled People Rights

S. NEGRINI

The World Day for Disabled People Rights (Table I) will take place on December the 3rd. The Italian Society of Physical and Rehabilitation Medicine (SIMFER), as well as other physical and rehabilitation medicine (PRM) scientific societies, have always supported this initiative. This year's support will be carried out through a joint initiative with the Vatican (Table II), according to recently defined commonalities.¹

Approximately 15 per cent of the world's population live with some form of disability. According to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), disability is an evolving concept that "results from the interaction between persons with impairments and attitudinal and environmental barriers that hinder their full and effective participation in society on an equal basis with others.”

Despite ongoing efforts to reduce disparities, disabled people still face barriers to participation. Not only physical and environmental barriers, but also the more subtle ones need to be considered, such as those regarding information and communications technology (ICT) or legislation or policy or societal attitudes or discrimination. These barriers preclude not only disabled people from equal access to society or services, but also the entire community from benefitting from their contribution. The commemoration of 2012 World Day for Disabled People Rights, with the theme entitled “Removing barriers to create an inclusive and accessible society for all” provides an opportunity to address these issues.
